Ford's Terror

High water slack at Ford's Terror occurs between 15 minutes and 60 minutes after high water in Juneau. The precise timing depends on a variety of factors—primarily the size of the tidal exchange and the amount of fresh water entering Ford's Terror from rivers and waterfalls.

Our best advice is to arrive at the entrance at high water in Juneau. Use your binoculars to peek into the rapids. If you see white water, wait. When the water looks like it has stopped, go.

Particularly towards the bottom of the ebb, the rapids at the entrance are hazardous. A series of large overfalls are a major hazard. And regardless of ebb or flood, the current sets boats onto a rock wall. How bad can it be? Check out this video (fast forward to 2:25, and make sure the volume is up).
